The first stage toward the degree of Doctor of Philosophy ends when the candidate completes certain minimum coursework, fulfillment of other departmental requirements, and successful passing of a qualifying examination. The second stage requires successful completion and presentation of an initial research paper. The third stage includes research and preparation of the dissertation. Completion of this stage requires an oral preliminary thesis proposal defense and an oral final dissertation defense.

The minimum number of graduate hours required for all stages combined is 64. A student plans courses and research with his or her advisor. Consideration is given to previous academic training, career objective and the general requirements of the Graduate College and the Department. The student should become familiar with these requirements and satisfy them as soon as possible.

The Doctor of Philosophy is primarily a research degree, and the candidate must demonstrate the capacity for independent research by producing an original thesis on a topic within his or her major field of study. The subject of the thesis must be reported to the doctoral committee and to the Graduate College at the time of the preliminary examination (proposal defense). The candidate is admitted to the final oral examination by the dean of the Graduate College upon completion of the dissertation and the recommendation of the department.

The doctoral program generally begins in the fall semester. The application period typically runs October 1 through February 15.
